Brooklyn, was thrown from his sleigh in Ninth avenue and Fifteenth street, Brook lyn, about 7 o'clock on Friday night, after a drive through the park. The sleigh was up-set and the horse dashed down the avenue at the height of his speed, with the upturned sleigh dangling behind him. Turning into Fourteenth street the affrighted animal continued his mad flight down the bill, to the terror of the pedestrians and sleigh ing parties on their way to the park. In cross ing Fifth avenue the horse struck sixteenrear-old John Jederland of 194 Fifteenth street and knocked him senseless. The box landed in a bank of snow fifteen feet distant with a scalp wound and a broken jaw. The horse finally turned into Hamilton ave are and dashed toward the forry house. Nar-rowly escaping several vehicles and pedes-trians, he passed through the ferry gate, down the bridge, and, after colliding with one of the posts, rushed through the driveway of the ferryhoat, and, fairly jumping over the guard fall in front, plunged overboard into the river. He was drowned.

NO STATUE OF MRS. SCHUYLER.

The intended exhibition of a statue of Mary Hamilton-Schuyler at the World's Fair by the Women's Memorial Fund Association has been absolutely forbidden by Justice Ingraham of the Supreme Court, in the suit brought to that end by Philip Schuyler, the lady's nephew and stepson. The statue was in-tended to be typical of "Woman, the Philanthropist," and was to be a companion piece of the Reformer." Justice O'Brien had granted a temporary injunction pending the suit, which also prevented the collection of funds for the statue. The decision of Justice O'Brien was affirmed by the Supreme Court, General Term, in a ong decision written by Presiding Justice Van is impressed with the justice of the decision. He says:

"These defendants are an irresponsible voluntary association, and are acting without public authority and against the express wishes of every relative and connection of Mrs. Schuyler. The defendants have shown no authority to make and exhibit a statue of Mrs. Schuyler. The only serious question seems to be whether, considering that the defendants have no legal right, has the plaintiff such an interest as entitles him to ask the Court to prevent the defendants from doing any unauthorized act which will cause pain and distress to him and the other relatives, and for which a court of law can afford no relief?"

The Court eags that the law has recognized mental pain and distress as ground of action in actions of slander, libel, and breach of promise. He believes they should be recognized in such a case as the present one. The primary objection that relief cannot be sought, as no judgment for damages could be secured by the relatives, he also brushes aside.

Jie says that this fact brings the case within equity jurisprudence to prevent a continuing wrong concerning which the law could compute no damages. For instance, children could enjoin the exhibition of a wax figure of a deceased parent in a museum.

MRS. HARRIS PLEADS FOR HER SON. She Insists that His Conviction of Murder

other of Carlyle Harris, Mrs. F. Mc Cready Harris, has written a long letter to THE Sun in which she tries to show that her son was not guilty of the murder of his wife. Helen Potts Harris, and that therefore a new trial should be allowed. The letter is written with the approbation of her counsel who has hitherto forbidden such an appeal to the

The letter tells at considerable length of the boy's affection for his mother in early youth and says that instead of being an actor for two years, as charged, he was for a time a member of a private theatrical club, where his talent attracted attention, which led to his engage-ment as a professional for one week, when he left the stage to please his mother. Then he became a steamship purser, but left that to study medicine. The letter then tells of what Mrs. Harris saw of the attentions which Carlyle paid to Helen Potts at Ocean Grove in 1880, and of a visit the young lady paid to the Harris's home in January, 1890, when the affection of the young January, 1890, when the affection of the young couple for each other was apparent, and Mrs. Harris begged the young woman not to marry the young man "for years to come."

Of the marriage she says that Mies Potts was a Methodist, but Carlyle had often said he would never be married by a preacher.

The keeping of a cafe at Asbury Park in 1800, she says, was to get money to complete his education. Here he let a club take part of his place and run a private bar. "Here was his great mistake," says the letter, for it led to his arrest for keeping a disorderly house. When released, she says, he went away under an assumed name, simply to escape the reporters.

Of the visit of the girl-wife to Mrs. Harris on the night before the poisoning the letter says: Helen was radiantly happy, and the boy and girl wers such evident lovers that when my second son returned from seeing them to the carl said: "I give up the light; she's had a poor bringing up, but she loves Carl, and I must help her to be a good wife to him." Carl, and I must help her to be a good wife to him."

The next day the young woman was dead. The remainder of the letter is intended to show that the conduct of Carlyle was that of an innocent man—that only an innocent man could have noted as he did—and to explaining the reasons why the writer of the letter went to deliver a lecture instead of calling on the mother of the dead girl. She says that she felt "delicate" about calling on Mrs. Potts, and, moreover, had promised to lecture.

As for Carlyle, he "went immediately to the District Attorney" when the charge of murder was made in print, and asked him to investigate the case.

was made in print, and asked him to investigate the case.

"He kept saying to me: 'I don't need any lawyer; the District Attorney will send for you, mother; he is my lawyer.' The District Attorney has never asked me a single question or seemed to care to find out the tuth," continues the letter.

Mrs. Harris says Carlyle was advised to run away, but he refused, saying: "I won't do it. I am innocent, and they'll find I am."

The letter concludes as follows:

MRS. BLANC'S DETECTIVE BILL.

She Has Failed to Pay for $642.51 Worth of Information Against Mr. Blanc,

Mrs. Elizabeth L. Blanc, the actress, is having her troubles these days, and if she paid attention to all of the papers served on her. much of her time would be spent in court. Papers were served on her on Friday night in supplementary proceedings to be held in the City Court before Judge McCarthy yesterday morning. The proceedings were on a judgment for $642.31 which John S. Wood obtained against her for detective services. Mrs. Blane wanted evidence against her hus band for her divorce suit, and she employed Wood to get it. Then she refused to pay

Wood to get it. Then she refused to pay the bill.

Mr. Blane had been subnounced to appear and tell want he knew about his wife's income. Mr. Blane was in court, but Mrs. Blane was not, nor did she have a lawyer there to represent her. John T. Canovan, who represented wood, asked the court to note Mrs. Blane's contempt. The judgment is a small one, however, and it is probable that Mr. Crnovan will not deem it worth while to ask for Mrs. Blane's punishment for contempt of court.

Justice Patterson of the Supreme Court has appointed Charles F. Bishop receiver in supplementary proceedings for Mrs. Blane in the action brought by Robert L. Stanton.

Mr. Whitlatch wrote several letters after he went to the room in the lodging house, and all of them will be produced at the trial. The plaintiffs attorney says that none of the letters indicate that he had any intention of killing himself. He also says that the nature of the wound shows that it could not have been inflicted by Whitlatch himself.

He took in the museums and other sights on the Bowery, and at 19 o'clock started for home. At Grand street he gave a young man fifty cents to take him to the Grand Central Station. Before starting, at the stranger's invitation they had some drinks, and then he remembered nothing more until he awoke in the station house. He said he had been robbed of $50, a sliver watch, and a brass chain. As he still seemed rather foggy, Justice Simms held him one day for safety.

COAL IN SMALL LOTS AT COST. Commissioner Straus's Yard on the East Side Will Be Open To-day.

Park Commissioner Nathan Straus opened a coal yard at the foot of East Third street yes terday, where poor folks may buy coal at cost. Coal peddlers sell coal at about 70 cents :

Coal peddlers sell coal at about 70 cents a hundredweight, and it's a mighty poor hundredweight too.

The present actual cost of a hundredweight to coal to a dealer. Mr. Straus's representative says, is a fraction less than twenty-five cents, and that is just what a poor person can buy it for at the new yard. Twenty posseds is the smallest amount sold. That costs five cents. The largest amount sold to any one person is 400 pounds for $1. The largest amount sold to any one person is 4001 pounds for $1.

Mr. Straus has two boat loads of coal at the dock now, and has as much more ordered. Just as long as coal costs as much as it does now to the consumer he will continue to run the yard, and will pay the expense of running it from his own pocket. There was a considerable business done yesterday, and it was decided last night that the place should be kept open to-day from 9 o'clock in the morning until 3 in the afternoon.

The second cut shows a very ordinary throw. The opponent's arm is faced backward and drawn out to the side directly away from him, so as to make him lose his balance. Still another throw can be made by pulling backward and to one side, so that your hand comes directly in front of the body; then push it away outwardly.

The best position to take is the one shown in the first cut. The forward foot is placed against that of your antagonist and the rear foot about thirty inches removed from and at right angles to the forward foot. Both knees right angles to the forward foot. Both knees should be bent.

The rules of hand wrestling are as follows: The man moving his foot or touching his hand or any part of his body to the floor, so as to get a better base, is thrown. Turning on one foe, so as to reach further, is allowed. Moving either foot sideways or allowing either to drag is a throw. In all cases the throw must be made with the hand. Pushing with head, elbow, shoulder, or side is strictly forbidden. The beauty of the sport is that it requires no conveniences. It can be enjoyed with an ordinary street dress on, and a mat is not required.

WINTER IN WESTCHESTER. The Caravan of Sleighs-Hunger of the Wild Birds.

Westchester county has been snow-clad almost continuously since the last of November, and for ten days past every vehicle that could be put upon runners has discarded wheels. The Wifte Plains road, a sort of local apian way, being the great artery that gives access way, being the greatartery that gives access to New York from a long string of towns and villages dotting the central line of the country, is traversed by hundreds of vehicles on runners. The region from Woodlawn to White Plains is sufficiently populous to justify the delivery of goods by wagon from New York and various suburban cities, and all these vehicles use the White Plains road. The result is to make that thoroughfare a panoramic epitome of local business life. Most of the local tradesmen and even some of the great New York houses have accepted the situation and placed their delivery wagons on runners, so that the pleturesqueness of the highway is vastly increased. At night the road for ten or fifteen miles is a pleasure highway for all sorts of vehicles on runners. All sorts of sntique sleighs have been brought out and dozens of rude boxes have been set upon ruder runners, and parties numbering as high as a dozen are dranged about at night to the music of sleigh bells and tin horns.

Dozens of more pretentious sleighing parties are out day and night from the citles of Mount Vernon and Yonkers and from the large suburban villages. Poople are now beginning to drive over to Pelham Bay Park, whence there is a marvelleus view of the icecovered Sound, with its score of ice-bound vessels. All the main roads throughout the county are now broken, and every day sees them in better condition for travel. Every sleigh that is for hire has been snapped up at high rates, and the liverymen of haif a dozen villages are coining unexpected wealth out of the weather.

Wild creatures have been driven by hunger
